I've always had a passion for writing. Whether it be an article about cheesecake, a review on Santa Claus, or the depiction of women in cinema, I enjoy telling stories the way I see it. This desire to communicate ideas through written form, as well as my penchant for creative design, is why I believe I would be a great fit for your junior web development position.

As a recent Juno College grad, I've designed and developed front-end interfaces, submitting large projects on a weekly basis. To me, web development is an artistic endeavor that has allowed me to utilize both skills and creativity in the form of creating a website. My proudest achievements are my most recent projects: a Pokedex app created by pulling data from the Pokemon API, and a responsive meme generator I created using React JS.

I am also a writer, with experience at 680 News, Sony Music Canada, Torontoist, and The Lyre. As an associate editor at the Lyre, I was integral to shaping the voice of the magazine, curating and editing student submissions I best believed represented the interests of St. Michael's College. My overall experience in the journalism industry reflects my goal-oriented nature, my eye for detail, and my ability to give and receive constructive criticism.

I am a firm believer that the way a website looks and functions should reflect its purpose, and believe that I am a great candidate for the job. I would love to discuss the position you have available, and can be reached at 647-865-4073 or at sarahmichelleduong@gmail.com to schedule an interview.
